NJCUL Announces Digital Marketing Conference on April 11th

Full-Day Conference will Tackle Technology, Trends, Tactics & Tools

HIGHTSTOWN, N.J. – Get a handle on strategies and legalities of social media and technology at NJCUL's Digital Marketing Conference "Technology, Trends, Tactics & Tools" on Friday, April 11th.

CU Grow CEO and social media expert James Robert Lay is back with two sessions: "CU in a Digital World: Banking on the Future" and "Putting Ideas Into Action". Attorney Michael DuPont will cover the "Legal Aspects of Social Media".

Attendees will also join in the conversation during a "How Others are Using Social Media" session led by NJCUL's Barbara Agin and Candice Nigro.

By the end of this in-depth, full-day conference, you'll know how to effectively and legally engage your members and potential members through many social media and technological channels. You'll leave with tangible ideas to bring back to the office and jump-start your digital marketing strategy.

The cost to attend is $179 per person for credit unions under $150 million and $279 per person for credit unions over $150 million. Click here for the full agenda and registration materials.

Survey Says Majority of Business Owners Unconcerned About Card Security

NEW YORK – As CUNA works for merchant accountability for breaches to their data systems, the results of a new study show a startlingly high 67% of business owners polled are not concerned about credit card security at their businesses.

Newtek Business Services, with a portfolio of more than 100,000 business accounts, announced the findings of its latest Small Business Authority Market Sentiment Survey, a monthly snapshot of the concerns of independent business owners.

"Based on a poll of over 1,400 respondents, one of the key findings from the February survey is that even after the recent hackings at major companies such as Target and Neiman Marcus, 67% of business owners are not concerned about credit card security at their business," Newtek said in a release.

What's more, Newtek reported, 63% of business owners are unaware of Europay-MasterCard-Visa (EMV) chip card technology. EMV is a global standard for credit and debit payment cards based on chip card technology.

CUNA supports the adoption of EMV technology, which adds an embedded chip for stronger security. However, CUNA strongly emphasizes that no one technology can address the burgeoning problem of merchant data breaches.

As the credit union trade association has underscored in a series of letters to federal lawmakers, inconsistent data security standards need to be addressed before a solution to merchant data breaches can be achieved.

"(A) prime reason that merchant data breaches are a chronic issue is because data security standards are inconsistent among the participants in the payments system," CUNA has pointed out, adding, "Simply put: credit unions and other financial institutions are subject to high data protection standards under the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act; merchants are not. When merchant data breaches occur, financial institutions—not merchants—bear the costs of replacing credit and debit cards and fraud costs."

In another EMV development, CO-OP Financial Services welcomed a recent agreement for debit EMV security standards between Visa Inc. and First Data STAR Network, a major electronic funds transfer system.

The credit union-owned ATM network operator said Feb. 26 that a number of its clients are in the STAR Network, and that it is also seeking to implement similar protective technologies like the one Visa and First Data hope to spread through their agreement.

Creative You Progress Report

The Creative You teams have a lot to be proud of! They've been hard at work the past few months developing and growing their innovative solutions to some of the biggest challenges facing credit unions today. One aspect of their project was to submit a Project Scope Document that outlines the credit union issue they are addressing and the scope of their idea for a solution. Visit the Creative You page of the NJCUL Web site at www.njcul.org/creative-you.aspx to view the Project Scope Documents of our teams: Greater Team Alliance, Team Aspire, Team XCEL, Team Y.O.L.O., and Team Symbionce. While there, take a look at their creative videos, if you haven't yet!

These teams have also been gearing up for their presentations to be given in front of panel of judges this Monday at the CU Reality Check conference!

At a special session on Monday from 3:00 – 4:30 p.m., the Creative You teams will each give a presentation in front of the panel of judges, which include Filene's Mollie Bell, Andrew Downin, and Tansley Stearns. These judges will watch each presentation, take in feedback from the audience (who may pose questions), and will ultimately choose which team they would like work with as a mentor. Three teams will walk away winners and will further develop their ideas along with guidance from their mentors, all leading up to final presentations at the NJCUL 2014 Convention.

For the two teams not chosen, there's always next year! They have the opportunity to join a fresh set of Creative You teams that will be developing new ideas and competing in 2015.

CUs & Chapters Invited to Sponsor Biz Kid$ Box Sets for CMN Hospitals

Credit Unions for Kids & the National Credit Union Foundation (NCUF) are partnering to enhance the financial education opportunities for patients and families at every Children's Miracle Network Hospital (CMNH) in the U.S. Biz Kid$ is the Emmy Award winning and credit union-funded public television series that teaches kids about money management and entrepreneurship.

Credit unions and chapters can now sponsor a Box Set of Biz Kid$ DVDs for their local CMN Hospital for $300. Box sets are encouraged to be purchased by March 15th so the donations to the hospitals can be made during April, which is National Financial Literacy Month.

“We hope the donation of the Biz Kid$ program will develop an even deeper credit union/hospital relationship where credit unions not only support the financial needs of the hospital but also the financial needs of the patient families,” said Danielle Brown, NCUF Director of Development and Donor Relations.

In addition to helping the kids in the hospitals, there are other benefits for participating credit unions or chapters as each box set of Biz Kid$ DVDs for the CMN Hospitals donation program has been specially created with room for a credit union or chapter to customize the DVD box set with their logo, URL, etc., so patients and families know who donated the program.

As well as other recognition, each participating credit union or chapter who commits to sponsoring a Biz Kid$ DVD Box Set by March 15th will:

- Be included in CU4Kids and NCUF press releases touting the initiative
- Receive acknowledgement on the NCUF and CU4Kids Web sites
- Be thanked publically on Twitter by CU4Kids
- Appear in a thank you ad running in credit union trade publications

“In addition to being valuable for the kids and their families, we strongly believe this initiative will be beneficial for credit unions as well,” says Felicity Guerin, Credit Unions for Kids development manager for the American Association of Credit Union Leagues.

For more information on this collaborative effort and to order the DVD Box Sets, visit ncuf.coop or click here.

CUNA, Bank Trades Throw Support Behind New 'Patent Troll' Bill

WASHINGTON – With the weight of a combined 14,000 financial institution memberships behind them, CUNA, the Independent Community Bankers of America, and the American Bankers Association sent a joint letter of support for a new bill to fight patent system abuses.

The bill (S. 2049) was introduced late last month and is titled the "Transparency in Assertion of Patents Act." It would curb unfair and deceptive practices during assertions of patents against legitimate businesses, including credit unions and banks.

The legislation takes an important step toward addressing the "exponentially growing threat of Patent Assertion Entities (PAEs), commonly referred to as 'patent trolls'," the joint letter states.

If enacted, it would help to address the burden credit unions and banks face when trying to decipher vague and misleading demand letters. And, the letter asserts, it would do so by taking specific aim at the problem, without affecting the rights of legitimate patent holders to send demand letters or otherwise assert their patent rights.

It would clarify the Federal Trade Commission's (FTC) authority to require basic information, such as the owner of the patent and specific technology involved, to be included in letters sent by PAEs.

"This will help the victims of trolls to quickly and inexpensively understand the infringement claim and how best to respond to it," the letter said.

The joint letter also noted that legitimate patent holders would benefit from the bill because it would empower the FTC to specify what constitutes a deceptive demand letter.

"This would provide patent holders with certainty of how to assert a patent without any risk that it could be labeled unfair or deceptive. Civil penalties would be imposed on those that continue to send out 'bad faith' demand letters, with exceptions provided for communications between parties on existing licensing agreements."

The bill was been referred to the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Committee, the chairman of which is a co-sponsor. The joint letter was sent to the committee chairman and the ranking Republican.

CUNA and the banking trades told the committee leaders that they look forward to working with members of the committee to find a "bipartisan solution that directly addresses the growing abuse of our patent system and the specious demand letters that are having a negative impact on our industry, our customers, and the American economy."
